Lightroom is, of course, the obvious choice for photographers. However, I have been using it for quite a while and am very happy with it. The software is, in the best sense of the word, user friendly. I know that this is very subjective and will depend on one's personal views, but I consider it to be very intuitive as well as easy to learn. After a few years of using Lightroom, I have become a bit of an expert. I can name every single feature and its function, and have done so in my previous Lightroom reviews. I no longer need to refer to a detailed tutorial or guidebook as my photography education is now complete at the systems level. Also, as it's still under active development, it is possible to enhance Lightroom to adapt to your needs, via its plug-in architecture that allows for its third-party additions. When it comes to editing, Lightroom streams beautifully on my 15" 3K Retina Macbook Pro, and is simply the best in terms of usability and workflow. I will always be a fan of Lightroom's stability and flexibility.
